Frosh promoter admits selling MDMA to cop

'I'm not a drug dealer.' Jarett Lopez says he could be facing six months in iail

Even though he admits he sold ecstasy to an undercover cop, Jarett Lopez doesn't think he should go to jail. He says he is not a drug dealer and says he was targeted because of a controversial frosh week party promo video he made.

The University of Ottawa student and party promoter was arrested Aug. 29 and charged with trafficking after selling MDMA pills (commonly called Molly, or ecstasy) inside a nightclub in the ByWard Market.

"The charge isn't bull----t, I clearly sold drugs to an undercover cop," Lopez told Metro in a Skype interview Wednesday. "A drug dealer, in my mind, is someone who wakes up and makes or sells drugs all day long. I have normal day-to-day things that I do: I go to school, I work. I'm not a drug dealer."

Lopez says that he was the subject of a targeted drug operation — one he says yielded just four pills of MDMA. He says he had no intention of selling the drugs that night and maintains they were for a friend on his birthday.

John deHooge

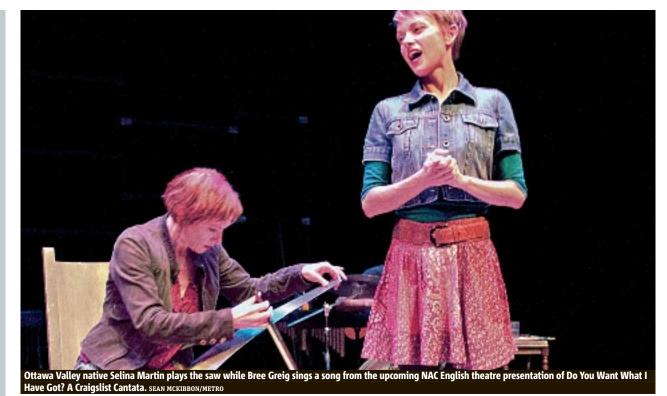

Fire services chief announces he's retiring

After a 35-year career, Ottawa Fire Services Chief John deHooge announced he will retire on January 31, 2015. DeHooge, who has led the department since his appointment 2009, was feted in a public statement issued by the city.

"Drawing on his considerable experience as fire chief in the City of Waterloo and as deputy fire chief for the Town of Oakville, Chief deHooge has been a strong and progressive leader during his time in Ottawa," said Mayor Jim Watson. "His focus has been on ensuring the safety of residents and visitors to the city. On behalf of my colleagues on council, I wish John all the best as he retires to spend more time with family and friends."

DeHooge oversaw a host of initiatives, promoting better service through inclusion and workplace culture, developing a mental health awareness program, overseeing the launch of two new fire stations, improving communications to staff, and strengthening partnerships with the Ottawa Police Service and Ottawa Paramedic Services through the Joint Emergency Services Operations Advisory Group. He has also helped the city to become the largest composite fire service in Canada to receive accreditation from the Commission on Fire Accreditation International.

The City of Ottawa says it will now begin the process of looking for a replacement. METRO

On stage. Just like the Craigslist ads it's based on Do You Want What I Have Got? sells itself in seconds

SEAN MCKIBBON

It's a musical about missed connections, surplus goods and human longing spelled out in Internet classified ads.

"It's a show created mostly from verbatim Craigslist quotes," explains musician and actor Selina Martin. There isn't really a narrative arc to it; rather, it's a collection of moving and often funny vignettes, she says.

"It's been going through various stages of evolution as we've been working on it over the years but now I feel like it's in its final tight little awesome package."

Initially it was 20 minutes, then grew to an hour and a half, and now it clocks in at a svelte hour and 15 minutes.

Ottawa media got a brief taste of the production Thursday — a short song performed by actor Bree Greig, with accompaniment on the saw by Martin, Marguerite Witvoet on piano and Barry Mirochnick on guitar. The song's all about a family whose young daughter apparently enjoys pulling the heads off dolls.

"Our therapist says we should let her," sang a clearly pained yet comical Greig before offering up a mess of headless dolls to a good home for free.

Some of the songs aren't completely verbatim, but based on the idea of some of the ads, but Martin says, verbatim or composed, the pieces use the idea of Craigslist to "look at human connectedness and disconnectedness and longing."

"I love non-traditional theatre. The comedy in it is sometimes really absurd and that's right up my alley and it's not really — in terms of musical theatre, it's not really a traditional musical — we break into songs for no reason too — we're singing Craigslist ads, but it feels way funnier to me," she says.

Do You Want What I Have Got? A Craigslist Cantata by Veda Hille, Bill Richardson and Amiel Gladstone runs Nov. 12-22.

Tokyo Police Club headed to Ottawa with Forcefield

Playing together since Grade 9.

Foursome released third studio album in March

When Tokyo Police Club orders late-night pizza after a sweaty gig, the last piece sits in the box with four hungry 20-somethings staring at it.

Nobody wants to be "that guy," the selfish jerk who ate the last piece of cheese pizza.

It's a metaphor for the level of respect the bandmates have for each other— a major reason why the Newmarket, Ont., foursome, who have been jamming together since Grade 9, haven't killed each other yet.

"We really have a respectful dynamic and we never get into arguments, really," said frontman David Monks, adding that there have been a couple "dark moments" when the band was younger. "Generally, we are not volatile."

The young band exploded onto the scene in 2007 — playing huge festivals like Coachella, Glastonbury and an appearance on the Late Show with David Letterman.

They rode that success through to 2010, releasing two studio albums along the way.

But Monks says the band hit a wall in 2011 and spent three years writing Forcefield, released earlier this spring. He said it was tough for the band to shrug off the early success and they couldn't get out of the mode of trying to win fans over.

They really wanted to get some U.S. radio time, but didn't have the right song for it. They worked tirelessly trying to find the right recipe for a U.S. radio audience and found it with Hot Tonight, but while it did make the airwaves, it didn't get enough play.

get enough play.

"You can't bottleneck your creativity in that way and just make it all about this one song," said Monks, adding that the record did eventually come out strong, but it just took too long.

The band plays Ottawa Nov. 28 at Ritual Nightclub for a crowd they know well. Monks estimated the band has played Ottawa about 30 times, but he still gets goosebumps when he sees fans screaming the words to all of his songs. Tickets are $30.

Sloan goes solo, sort of, on new record

Members of the Canadian rock band Sloan are literally getting their own 15 minutes of fame.

On their new album Commonwealth, each of the quartet's members got a side of the double vinyl record to use as an open canvas — Canadian democracy at its finest.

It's a way for the band to put out that inevitable solo record that aging rockers usually venture into without going on a hiatus or breaking up.

"Our band is probably one of the few bands where everybody could actually make a solo record if they chose to, because everybody sings and writes and plays different instruments," said Jay Ferguson, who is typically the band's rhythm guitarist.

On Commonwealth, he sings, shreds and hammers on the drums — skills he will put on display during the band's Ottawa stop Nov. 28 at Mavericks.

"We thought we would do it all under the guise of Sloan and make a double album where everybody gets their own 15 minutes of real estate to do exactly what they want," he

For guitarist Andrew Scott, he takes a bit more time, occupying his side with one epic track worth 17 minutes. Much of the album still sounds like classic Sloan, but each side has its distinct flavour — from the heavy, catchy riffs that made the band popular in the '90s to the more melodic tones that made 2001's Pretty Together so fluid

The beauty of releasing a solo album together as a band for Ferguson is that he gets to hear three-quarters of the record as a fan — something he hasn't really experienced in the band's 23-year career.

"I am a fan of the other people in the band, so almost reacting to it as a fan, it's fun to listen to what I would imagine a Chris (Murphy) solo record to sound like," said Ferguson.

Sloan hits Mavericks Nov. 28. Doors open at 8 p.m. with tickets at $29.50.

Jail-guard witness a 'blame shifter,' claims defence

Court. Woman omitted details of inmate's alleged beating in her initial report

A correctional officer was told that if she could not explain the bloody injuries on inmate Jean Paul Rheaume's face, she would be held responsible for his alleged beating, an Ottawa courtroom heard on Thursday.

So Melissa Schell told internal investigators her colleague, John Barbro, stomped twice on the inmate's head at the Ottawa-Carleton Detention Centre on Oct. 23, 2010. He was fired and is now on trial for assault causing bodily harm.

In her initial written report, court heard Schell purposely omitted details about the alleged beating. But she said internal investigators were "pushy" when they interviewed her almost four months later. Holding up a photograph of Rheaume's bloodied face, they told her to identify the cause of his injuries or risk losing her job, she said.

She was suspended for 15 days.

Although she previously told court that she glossed over details in her initial report because she was afraid both she and Barbro would lose their jobs, defence lawyer Michael Edelson called her a "blame shifter" and said she put her coworker's career at risk.

"Because he did it," Schell responded.

She previously told the courtroom that Rheaume, who suffers from a brain injury, walked out of his cell after Schell collected his meal tray and demanded to go for a walk.

"I will rape your sister," he told her and raised his arm as if to strike, according to Schell's version of events. She and her partner tried restraining him and fellow guards rushed to help. They got Rheaume on the floor, handcuffed him and that's when Barbro allegedly stomped on him.

But Schell admitted in court that certain details of the incident have become foggy due to time and stress.

In her initial statement to investigators, she said Barbro wore boots when he stomped on Rheaume.

But court heard Barbro always wore running shoes at work.

The trial continues on Monday.

Survivor of teen prostitution shares her story of recovery

'It was a f---ing circle.'

Woman speaks out after ringleader of teen pimping ring in Ottawa was sentenced to 6.5 years in prison

JOE LOFARO joe.lofaro@metronews.ca

She grew up in an affluent suburb in Ottawa's east end. Her parents were government workers. She had what seemed like a normal early teenage life.

But at age 14, after her parents divorced, she ran away from home and wound up on the streets of Vanier looking for clean clothes, money and a place to stay.

Men would pass her on the street. "Hey, how are you?" a strange man would ask. He would return night after night, get to know her, gain her trust, and then, she says, one time he asked her for a favour — would she meet a "friend"?

The favour meant a loss of innocence and ended with cash in someone else's pockets. She doesn't want to go into details.

When asked what happened when she met with that "friend," she says:

"You know, just what happens. We exchanged services for money. I knew what I was getting into."

She met her clients through escort ads in local newspapers, she says.

This went on until she was rescued at age 17.

More than a decade after it all started, she broke her silence this week by speaking to Metro about her experience as a teenage sex worker.

Jessica (not her real name) doesn't want her true identity revealed in order to protect her privacy.

Metro confirmed her story with Ottawa police, with her consent.

After news reports about a teen pimping ring in Ottawa exploiting young girls, and with the ringleader sentenced last week to 6.5 years in prison,

Jessica wanted to share how she overcame the trauma of working as a 14-year-old sex worker. She hopes that it might help the teen pimping ring's victims and others.

As a runaway, deprived of the benefits of her family's home life, Jessica found the pimps were quick to step in.

"They know what runaways want. We want clean clothes, we want a place to stay. We want food. We want alcohol," she says.

"I knew what I was getting into. I wasn't like those poor girls, those poor victims in that new case. Like that 13-year-old, (who said), 'I was going for a sleepover.' That made me cry because I can just imagine how innocent a 13-year-old can be."

Lately, she has been considering doing outreach work for runaway girls to prevent them from making the same choices she did.

At 14, she says she felt like she had no choice. Police would bring her back home and she would do it all over again.

"Run away, go back to the same people. It was a f-ing

Quoted

"They know what runaways want. We want clean clothes, we want a place to stay. We want food. We want alcohol." Jessica on how quick pimps are to step in circle," she says.

Things got even worse when she met a female pimp.

"Women pimps are the worst kind because you trust them. She treated me worse than any other male pimp that I knew," she recalls.

Both Jessica and her female pimp were arrested. One of Jessica's charges included living off the proceeds of crime.

She says she spent nine months in closed custody where she saw a counsellor regularly to help her get on the right path as she entered adulthood.

How Jessica recovered from the trauma

One way Jessica deals with dark houghts about her past is by writing them down in a diary that

Jessica endured three years of life on the streets and nights spent in hotel rooms with strange men.

Today, she says she has a full-time job, is a few months away from earning a college diploma, and is engaged to her fiancé, with whom she shared her dark past.

Here's how she got here:

One-on-one time

After she served her time, she sought help from a therapist so that she could talk about what happened to her.

To this day, Jessica's parents don't know the whole story and she wants to keep it that way. The fear of being judged by family members was too much for her and she knew she wouldn't be completely honest with them, anyway.

"When you tell it to somebody who's not your family member and who has to keep it anonymous, it's like you're telling it to a book with a key," says Jessica.

With a therapist, she can say things without the anxiety of her using it against her. Leaving the therapist's office after a one-on-one session was the most rewarding part.

"It's like heaven, you feel so cleansed and clean and it's like nothing can stop you after that," she says.

"If I didn't have my therapist, I wouldn't have finished high school, I wouldn't have finished college ... I wouldn't be where I am today."

Burning the book

The harsh reality of recovering from post-traumatic stress disorder is that the horrific memories never leave your mind completely, she says.

So, when Jessica is at her desk at work or after her morning shower and she remembers something awful about her past, she jots it down in a notebook. When there are no more blank pages left, she lights the book on fire.

The diary of dark thoughts is reduced to ashes.

"I do feel better because it's gone, it's finished. And my memories aren't as frequent," she says.

"Just once in a while, they get really bad. Sometimes they get really bad and I need to write them down. You feel clean until the memories come back again. It's going to be a part of you forever and you need to learn to cope with that."

Keep goals, keep busy

The first step in changing the course of your life is wanting to change your life, she says. For Jessica, it started with school while she was in custody as a youth.

"School doesn't sound like therapy, but school was therapy. It keeps your mind off of everything and you have a goal, you're working towards something. That means something," she says.

Now that she's older, the daily grind at work helps keep her busy, which means less time to think of bad memories.

"As you achieve each milestone, it's actually therapeutic," she says. "It really is."

Det. Carolyn Botting, left, and Det. Kelly Lyle said the victims are satisfied with the six-and-a-half-year sentence given to an 18-year-old woman who lured young girls into a teen prostitution ring in Ottawa's south end in 2012.

Buying sex? Ask for ID first, says police investigator

'A big disincentive.'

New prostitution law could scare johns from reporting underage and forced workers: Criminology professor

JOE LOFARO joe.lofaro@metronews.c

A lead detective in Ottawa's teen pimp investigation wants men who purchase sex to ensure the people they are having sex with are over 18 and willing participants.

But an advocate for sex workers warns doing so might put johns in a legal quandary.

After the ringleader of the teen pimping ring was sentenced last week as an adult, Ottawa police Det. Carolyn Botting said men need to start talking to other men about the purchase of sex.

"You have to do more than ask a person their age. You need to check identification," said Botting in an interview with Metro on Wednesday.

"Things would be different and safer for ... people who choose to work in this industry"

Chris Bruckert, a criminology professor at the University of Ottawa, said it is realistic to ask johns to ensure their customers are over 18 and consenting.

However, the federal government's new prostitution laws, which come into effect Dec. 6, will put johns in an awkward situation, Bruckert suspects.

The new law criminalizes

The teen pimp case

Ottawa police uncovered the underage pimping ring because a john did call police. That man blew the lid off the whole operation after a girl who came to his door May 18, 2012, told him she was 17 and was forced to be there. He called police and later testified in court as a witness for the Crown.

the act of buying sex.

"If in fact they do call police because they suspect someone is underage or in a situation of exploitation, they're actually setting themselves up to be criminally charged," said Bruckert. "So, that's quite a big disincentive, to not help the police."

Kink versus coercion: How experts test sexual desire

S&M and consent. Canada's top forensic psychiatrist explains what tests can tell us

Some people are aroused by consensual sadomasochistic sex, and others are turned on by violating another person's consent.

In sexual-behaviour laboratories in Ottawa, it's possible to tell the difference.

The high-profile allegations against former CBC host Jian Ghomeshi have raised a lot of questions about consent and S&M.

"There are some people who, besides the fact that they may be interested in S&M sex, may also have arousal or sexual interest or sexual preference related to non-consensual sex," said Dr. John Bradford. "When we evaluate people ... we can tease out these types of things, to see what the sexual preference actually is."

Bradford has examined the country's most infamous sexually motivated serial killers: Paul Bernardo, Robert Pickton and Russell Williams. Bradford is the founder of the Forensic Psychiatry Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada in Ottawa, professor of forensic psychiatry at multiple universities, and a member of the Order of Canada.

He said that when discussing Ghomeshi, who has publicly acknowledged engaging in "rough sex," it's important to recognize that sadomasochism occurs all over the world between consenting people without issue.

He has not examined Ghomeshi and said he could talk only in general terms.

Nine women and one man have accused Ghomeshi of crimes including sexual harassment and non-consensual sexual violence. Ghomeshi has said through a Facebook posting that all of his sexual activities were consensual. He is under police investigation, but has not been charged.

Studying sexual preference

Bradford said a preference for non-consensual sex can be determined.

"We have sexual-behaviour laboratories where we can measure sexual arousal," he

Bradford said the subject would be presented with different situations — consensual and non-consensual — and his arousal would be measured to determine a sexual interest in violating consent. The subject would also be presented erotic aggression to determine sadistic interest.

Bradford said a preference for non-consensual sex can be determined by measuring physical signs of arousal, such as penis circumference.

If coercion, non-consensual sexual activity or violence is arousing to a person, it may be compulsive, he said.

"At a very high level, you see that in serial rapists and even people who go on to commit sexually motivated homicide. Like all biological things, there is a spectrum there."

Bradford typically offers his expertise at the sentencing stage of a criminal trial after examining the perpetrator.

"I suppose in theory, in extremely rare circumstances, it could be used as a guilt-orinnocence thing, but I don't think it should be. It's mostly related to treatability or rehabilitation and those components which come out at sentencing."

Nature or nurture? Choice or compulsion?

Even though Bradford is able to determine what people are aroused by, what's made them that way remains largely a mystery.

"What we know is that people who have atypical sexual interests, the best way to understand it is the same as anyone else. When we hit puberty and become sexually (mature) — we wake up, if you like — there's an outpouring of sex hormones, we develop a sex drive and sexual fantasies and urges.

"This appears to be preprogrammed. In other words, nobody chooses at that point to become pedophilic or have an atypical interest in S&M or things like that," he said.

There is research into whether developing an atypical sexual interest is nature or nurture, but it's inconclusive, he said. Most of the nature vs. nurture research is focused on criminals who commit sexually motivated homicides.

Some of those who commit sexually motivated homicides have been found to have brain damage or a chromosome abnormality.

However, that research can't explain why some people with atypical sexual preferences participate only in consenting activities, while others don't.

Bradford said there is promising research into how sexuality may be formed by the interaction of genetics and hormones while a person is still in the womb. That research is still too preliminary to be relied upon.

What's the deal with Big Ears Teddy?

As for one of the odder details of the Ghomeshi allegations — that he turned around his "Big Ears Teddy" so it couldn't see him become violent — Bradford said he couldn't know what it means without examining Ghomeshi

But, if he were involved in a case with that detail, it would certainly be something he'd ask about.

"It may have all kinds of implications to it. It may be something to do with child-hood.... It could be, in theory, very important if someone was engaged in a criminal trial and sentencing process. It may make the problems more understandable, and may also go to treatability," he said.

Local professor remains defiant despite losing extradition fight

An Ottawa sociology professor says he will keep fighting for his freedom now that he faces certain extradition to France in a decades-old terrorism case.

The Supreme Court of Canada said Thursday it would not hear the appeal of Hassan Diab, wanted for questioning by French authorities in connection with the October 1980 bombing of a Paris synagogue.

Some time in the next six weeks, Diab — now locked in an Ottawa jail — will be whisked to France, where a judge will quiz him about the unsolved crime.

French authorities suspect Diab, 60, was involved in the anti-Semitic bombing 34 years ago that killed four people and injured dozens.

In a statement, Diab described life since his arrest six years ago as a Kafkaesque nightmare. He expressed shock and disappointment in the high-court decision and promised to never stop battling "the false allegations" levelled against him.

"I had hoped for justice from the Canadian legal system," he said. "I vow to never give up, and I will always remain hopeful that I will eventually return to my home in Canada and be reunited with my wife and children."

In keeping with standard practice, the Supreme Court gave no reason for its decision.

In submissions to the court, Diab's lawyer Donald Bayne argued that France's reliance on secret information raises basic issues of constitutionality and procedural fairness. Another key element of the case is the reliability of evidence that has been revealed to date — particularly handwriting on a hotel registration card allegedly penned by Diab.

Child porn case.Parents of victim satisfied with conditional discharge

The father of a victim in a highprofile child pornography case said he feels good about the strong comments made by the judge during sentencing, but would have liked to hear an apology from the accused "when it mattered."

On Thursday, a youth court judge gave a conditional discharge to a 20-year-old man who pleaded guilty to making child porn involving a 15-year-old girl.

He cannot be identified because he was 17 when he committed the offence.

The girl died last year after she was taken off life support following a suicide attempt, and cannot be identified because of a publication ban. She was 17.

"There's no sentence that would be good enough or strong enough to ever reflect what this did to my daughter," the father told reporters after court. His name can't be published because it would identify the victim.

The victim's father said

Guilty plea

Man avoids jail time in sentencing

A young man who pleaded guilty to making child pornography after he took a picture of an intoxicated teenager having sex at a party was given a conditional discharge and a sharp reprimand by the judge for destroying the girl's life.

The 20-year-old stood stone-faced Thursday as the youth court judge spent 40 minutes reading the sentence in a case that captured national attention.

"He should never forget the promising, vibrant, young life that was eventually destroyed by his choice to record an act of sexual degradation," Judge Gregory Lenehan told the packed courtroom in Halifax.

"You did in a few seconds set in motion a series of events that led to a great deal of shame, humiliation, anger, despair, anguish, loss, hurt and destruction."

The young man will also have to register with the national DNA database and meet with a youth worker periodically for 12 months. He was also ordered to issue a written apology to the girl's family.

Lenehan said he was satisfied the young man felt remorse for his actions because he made "a full and frank admission of his involvement."

he was glad the judge spoke strongly to the accused about the impact the photo had on his daughter's life, but would have liked to hear from the young man before the incident came to court.

"He knew the damage that this did, and didn't do anything about it. He should have did it when it mattered," he said.

Nearly a dozen Anonymous protesters holding signs with the victim's name shouted "f-k the ban" outside court.

Both parents read victim impact statements in court and wiped tears from their eyes, with her mother saying the photo "ruined her life."

"She was never the same again," her mother said. "The impact and trauma that followed her was enormous."

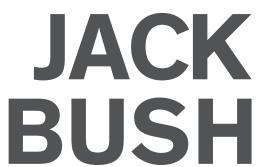

Her mother said she is still trying to forgive the accused for taking the photo, but does not believe he deserved jail time.

P.E.I. Needles now found in 10 potatoes, RCMP say

The RCMP in Prince Edward Island say their investigation into food tampering now includes 10 potatoes containing sewing needles.

The Mounties say the needles were found in three more potatoes originating from Linkletter Farms in Summerside with the help of metal detection equipment.

The potatoes were returned as part of a voluntary recall and have been sent to a forensic laboratory for more testing.

Police were already investigating seven incidents of potato tampering throughout the Atlantic provinces.

The RCMP say three more pallets of recalled potatoes have yet to be examined.

The potato industry in P.E.I. is offering a reward of up to $50,000 for information on how needles ended up in the potatoes. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Liberals want swift probe of MPs' alleged misconduct

Here's the problem. There is no process to deal with complaints of harassment between MPs

In the fishbowl that is federal politics, how do two suspended Liberal MPs accused of unspecified personal misconduct get their shot at due process? This is the messy question causing angst within Liberal circles, a week after Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau suspended Massimo Pacetti and Scott Andrews.

Where a person accused in a corporate or public service workplace might have first gone through a confidential investigation or mediation process before being reprimanded, Pacetti and Andrews were outed and ousted right from the starting gate.

Neither the details of the misconduct of which they are accused, nor the names of the alleged victims, have been released publicly.

On Thursday, NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair wrote to Trudeau and Prime Minister Stephen Harper urging the parties to develop a sexual harassment code of conduct and appoint a third party to deal with complaints as they arise.

The tri-partisan, closeddoor board of internal economy had already moved up its scheduled meeting to Tuesday to deal with the allegations, which first surfaced last week.

"There needs to be an urgent decision made by the (committee). They shouldn't have waited a whole week," said Liberal MP Hedy Fry.

While Liberal MPs support Trudeau's action as the only one he could have taken under the political circumstances, some of them say the men now deserve to have the matter dealt with as quickly as possible. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Bigger than Tigger: Real tiger on loose near Disneyland Paris

On the prowl. With 70-kilogram cat nearby, police urge residents of three neighbouring French towns to stay indoors

French authorities said a young tiger was on the loose Thursday near Disneyland Paris, one of Europe's top tourist destinations, and urged residents in three towns to stay indoors.

The town of Montevrain sent out a news alert on its Facebook page Thursday saying a young tiger was spotted in the brush behind some tennis courts and a soccer field. The field is about nine kilometres from Disneyland Paris.

Around 60 police, fire and other security forces were trying to track the tiger, said

Cedric Tartaud, chief of staff for the Montevrain mayor.

The tiger is estimated to weigh around 70 kilograms, Tartaud said.

Police were using a helicopter to help search for the animal, and a wolf-catcher was also drafted in to aid in the search, Seine-et-Marne authorities said.

Police and rescue squads at the scene roped off a security perimeter, authorities added, and they urged people living in Montevrain, Chessy and Chalifert to remain indoors. If they had to travel, police advised them to stay in their cars.

All animals accounted for at park

The Parc des Félins, a wild cat animal park about 18 miles from Montevrain, said in a statement on its website that all of its animals were accounted for and the escaped tiger didn't come from there.

EuroDisney, the operator of Disneyland Paris, said it has no tigers in the theme park, so the errant cat could not have come from there either. It wasn't immediately clear if any extra precautions had been taken inside the park. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Overshadowed. Philae cut off from solar energy

Europe's comet lander Philae has come to rest in the shadow of a cliff, posing a potential problem for its solar panels, scientists said Thursday as they published the first image ever taken from a comet's surface.

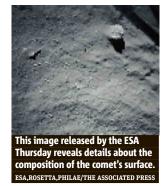

The photo shows a rocky terrain, with one of the lander's three feet in the corner of the frame. It is part of a slew of data that Philae is transmitting back to Earth, indicating that its instruments are working properly, said Jean-Pierre Bibring, the lander's lead scientist at the European Space Agency (ESA).

Before deciding whether to try to adjust the lander, scientists will spend the next day or two collecting as much data as possible while its primary battery still has energy. The lander's solar panels were designed to provide an extra hour of battery life each day after that, but this may not be possible now.

"We (can) see that we got less solar power than we planned for," said Koen Geurts of the lander team.

"This, of course, has an impact on our energy budget and our capabilities to conduct science for an extended period of time," he said. "Unfortunately, this is not a situation that we were hoping for."

The landing was beset by a series of problems that began when the thrusters designed to push Philae on to the comet failed, and continued when two harpoons meant to be used as anchors did not deploy. The lander bounced back up and came to rest on the comet two hours later inside a shallow crater, in the shadow of a nearby cliff, Bibring said.

He said the data they'll be able to collect with the primary batteries alone will have made the landing worthwhile.

"A lot of science is getting covered now," he said, noting they would soon receive data about the comet's composition and 3D images of the comet.

He said they will wait for the first batch of data to be completely sent before trying to move it and adjust its solar panels. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sheriff's office pays virus ransom

The Dickson County Sheriff's Office in Middle Tennessee ended up paying a ransom after a malicious computer program blocked access to their files.

Det. Jeff McCliss told WTVF-TV that malware on a computer locked the agency's case files, which included autopsy reports, witness statements and crime scene photos. He says the malware, called "Cryptowall," doesn't tamper with files on a computer, but keeps them locked until a ransom is paid.

Shocking increase

Warmer temps, more lightning

A new study says lightning strikes in the United States will likely increase by nearly 50 per cent by the end of the century, as the world gets warmer and wetter. Researchers calculated that for every degree Fahrenheit the world warms, lightning strikes will go up nearly seven per cent. That's 12 per cent for every degree Celsius. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hachette, Amazon bury the hatchet

A real nail-biter. After some twists and turns the online retailer and book publisher have reached a happy ending

One of publishing's nastiest, most high-profile conflicts, the months-long standoff between Amazon.com and Hachette Book Group, is ending.

Amazon and Hachette announced a multi-year agreement Thursday. With ebook revenues reportedly the key issue, Amazon had removed pre-order tags for Hachette books, reduced discounts and slowed deliveries, hurdles that should be gone well before the crucial holiday shopping season

"This is great news for writers," Hachette CEO Michael Pietsch said in a statement. "The new agreement will benefit Hachette authors for years to come. It gives Hachette enormous marketing capabil-

More to the story

Hachette was among five publishers sued in 2012 by the U.S. Justice Department for allegedly fixing ebook prices. The publishers, who had worried that Amazon was charging too little for ebooks, settled and were required to negotiate new deals with Amazon and other retailers.

 Under the new agreement, Hachette set prices for ebooks, "and will also benefit from better terms when it delivers lower prices for readers."

ity with one of our most important bookselling partners."

David Naggar, an Amazon vice-president, said the company was pleased that the agreement "includes specific financial incentives for Hachette to deliver lower prices, which we believe will be a great win for readers and authors alike.'

The agreement takes effect early next year. Restrictions on Hachette books are being lifted immediately, according to the announcement, although delays on Carlos Santana's The Universal Tone, J.D. Salinger's Nine Stories and other works remained in place two hours after the news broke.

The Amazon-Hachette dispute had dominated publishing headlines and conversations for much of the year. James Patterson, John Green and hundreds of authors from various publishers had condemned Amazon, and Hachette author Stephen Colbert mocked the online retailer, which prides itself on customer service. Meanwhile, Hugh Howey, J.A. Konrath and other writers published by Amazon had blamed Hachette and praised Amazon for keeping prices down and allowing authors unhappy with traditional publishers to release their work elsewhere.

Washington Capitals star winger Alex Ovechkin is seen wearing a Bauer RE-AKT helmet in this game photo from April. A U.S.-based hockey equipment manufacturer has agreed to stop making claims that "create the impression" that one of its hockey helmets offers protection from concussions, the Competition Bureau said Thursday The federal regulator said Bauer Hockey Corp.'s claims made in advertisements for the RE-AKT helmet were not supported by adequate testing, a finding the company said it did not agree with.

'TIS EASIER TO SEND THAN TO RECEIVE

Of the many new and exciting ways to be sort of awful to each other that the online age has created, sending links is among the worst.

It doesn't seem like it would be, I know. And maybe it's not, actually. Many a link — via email, text message, chat and messages, direct or instant, to articles, memes, videos and other Internet detritus — is sent with the best possible intentions. This includes stories that you're sure a friend would dig and probably hasn't seen, or a link to a zoo's "panda cam" sent on somebody's sick day, or A-grade gossip that is best circulated as-is for maximum schadenfreude impact.

But maybe more often, it's a ubiquitous bad habit enabled by social media; either a low-effort attempt to communicate something you don't or can't say yourself, or the casually passive-aggressive equivalency of an anonymous note—like, say, when I was exhausted by constant, pointless arguing

with my then-boyfriend. I'd send him links to articles that more or less reflected my own position on a topic, and then would refuse to discuss or debate the links with him. (I now call that a "hit-and-run.")

One of my best friends hates watching videos online — something to do with having to locate and put on her headphones in her open-plan office — and just deletes them.

I don't like receiving a link of any kind without a note of context to let me know if I'm interrupting my daily sprint toward a deadline with a twominute music video or a seven-page long-read about poverty.

Our individual Internet-styles are so totally personal and obscured from our friends and colleagues, and contingent on everything from loading speeds to work schedules and responsibilities, to emotional capacities for different kinds of content, that an act requiring the barest physical and mental effort to send can require much more to receive.

The "?" I might type in response to the sudden, stressful appearance of a link in a Gchat conversation — what will this be; what will the IRL implications be on my time and feelings and inbox; will I seriously have to click this and then respond to it — means my sweet friend sending a dancing pizza gif is cornered into explaining what was intended as a tiny, funny gesture.

Sending a link to someone is different in purpose and effect than posting it for any and everyone to see.

Even with the very kindest online instincts — a dancing slice of pizza! — comes an expectation that the sended-to person engages with some third-party stuff.

My own rule is to send something that I think someone might like, but never follow up or ask if they've read it.

It's not what your friend has to say, but what your friend wants you to see — that is a special kind of imposition on our attention, and a new, complicated social obligation to add to the list.

The politics of appropriation

Myanmar's 'diverse' greeters all come from dominant ethnic group

Women welcoming world leaders at the East Asia summit on Thursday stood in rows, clad in costumes representing Myanmar's many ethnic groups, some with their hair tied in high knots or wrapped in red headdresses, others donning horizontally striped longyis and silver coin-studded capes.

But the ushers did not belong to any of the minority groups they represented. All were Burman, the ethnic majority that has dominated the government, military and economy since independence from Britain in 1948. Myanmar, a mostly Buddhist nation of 50 million, began transitioning to democracy in 2011 following a half-century of brutal military rule and self-imposed isolation.

But while 40 per cent of the population belongs to one of more than 130 ethnic minorities, efforts by the new government to project unity often falter.

Take Naypyitaw. Purpose-built as Myanmar's new capital, it is dotted by impressive stadiums, enormous meeting halls and hundreds of villas. Gilded pagodas abound, but there is not a single church, even though 80,000 residents are Christian.

Meanwhile.

Myanmar's 1.3 million Rohingya Muslims, denied citizenship by the government, have been described by the UN as one of the world's most persecuted minorities. More than 140,000 live in crowded, unsanitary camps, unable to pass police checkpoints to leave without paying hefty bribes.

Delayed sequels are often dumb

Movies. Twenty-year delay between Dumb and Dumber films invites comparison to such bombs as Bambi II, The Birds II and The Odd Couple II

Twenty years ago, Roger Ebert wrote that a moment in Dumb and Dumber, "made me laugh so loudly, I embarrassed myself."

The movie, starring Jim Carrey and Jeff Daniels as the chicken-brained Lloyd and Harry, made $250 million at the box office and seemed likely to spawn a sequel, but nothing happened for almost 20 years.

There was a prequel — Dumb and Dumberer: When Harry Met Lloyd — but it was a Carrey-and-Daniel-less exercise in futility I called on its 2003 release, "one of the least-funny and ineptly made movies to ever play at your local multiplex."

So why did it take 19 years and 333 days to release a Dumb and Dumber follow-up? Carrey says he wasn't into doing sequels but softened because everyone kept hounding him, he joked, "even dead people."

Fans had to wait ages for Dumb and Dumber's return, but two decades is a mere drop in the bucket when compared to the gap between the 1942 Disney classic Bambi and its sequel Bambi II.

A 10-year-old who saw the original would have been old enough to send their grandkids to get popcorn refills when the sequel hit theatres overseas (it went direct to DVD in North America) almost 64 years later.

Dumb and Dumber To

Directors. Bobby and Peter Farrelly

Stars. Jim Carrey, Jeff Daniels

• • • •

In Dumb and Dumber To, Lloyd (Jim Carrey) and best friend Harry (Jeff Daniels) hit the road, this time in search of a daughter (Rachel Melvin) Harry didn't know he had. She's the "fruit of his loom" but could also be the kidney donor he needs to save his life. Two decades since the original, Harry and Lloyd haven't gotten any wiser but they haven't gotten much funnier, either. There are some astoundingly un-PC gags — and I mean "gags" literally — here, but none that reach the otherworldly vulgarity of the original's laxative overdose scene. Instead it's predictably silly, amiable stuff with wall-to-wall jokes and one-liners, some of which hit but most don't.

And 30 years after Alfred Hitchcock made seagulls menacing in The Birds, a made-for-television movie called The Birds II: Land's End revisited the killer avian story.

Tippi Hedren, star of the original, signed on and it was shot in the same house as the first film, but that's where the similarities between the two end.

The New York Times called the film "feeble," and Hedren said, "It's absolutely horrible; it embarrasses me horribly."

horribly."
Also, 29 years and 343 days after 1968's The Odd Couple hit the big screen, writer Neil Simon and stars Jack Lemmon and Walter Matthau reunited for The Odd Couple II.

"We always had bad chemistry," says Oscar Madison (Matthau). "We mix like oil and frozen yogurt."

It marked the last starring roles for each of its leads and the final collaboration between Lemmon and Matthau after making 10 movies together.

These days, Hollywood seems obsessed with sequels and next year will be no different Mad Max: Fury Road, starring Tom Hardy in the role that made Mel Gibson famous, returns 30 years after Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome.

Jurassic World revisits Jurassic Park III, 13 years later.

But the biggest sequel news of the year — maybe of the decade — is the December 2015 release of Star Wars: The Force Awakens.

In the official Star Wars chronology, the new film follows 1983's Return of the Jedi after a space of 32 years and 207 days.

From The Daily Show to directorial debut

Movies. Jon Stewart gets behind the camera for Rosewater and injects some humour in a dark story

MATT PRIGGE

Metro World News in New York

Last summer Jon Stewart disappeared for two and a half months so he could direct a movie in Jordan. The result, Rosewater, is not a comedy, though it has jokes. It's about Maziar Bahari (played by Gael Garcia Bernal), an Iranian journalist who wound up detained and tortured by Tehran officials for 118 days — in part because of his appearance on The Daily Show.

Nice shout-out early in the film to Pier Pasolini's Teorema.

You gotta respect the Teorema shout-out! Maziar may be the most culturally literate individual I've ever met in my life. His vast knowledge of literature and art and music and film — it's actually annoying.

How did you prepare to direct a film? Did you bug film-makers?

There were a couple of people I went to, just to ask, "Is this viable? I've written a script. Is it a script? Do you look at it and say, 'You know what, it turns out it's a recipe. This is actually mock-apple pie, it's not a movie."

Were there things that surprised you about filmmaking, things you weren't prepared for?

The availability of craft services. That was 24 hours of hummus and apricots, in a way that was quite surprising — and quite delicious. The process here wasn't alien to the process we use on the show. The difference is at the show we're in the same location every day. But we use the same sort of mechanics. So much of our time was spent trying to figure out how we can accomplish what we want to accomplish better and more efficiently. I had good actors, I had a good DP (director of photography), sound crew, production designers. So it was about making sure that the alchemy was right, that we were doing whatever we needed to make sure it all worked.

This is a more serious production than The Daily Show.

I don't believe so. On The Daily Show, we use the tools of satire to address war, death, famine, all kinds of things. With this, we're using the tools of cinema to address very similar themes and subtexts.

Can you talk about the humour in this film? It's far from a comedy, but there are jokes.

I think humour was so central to Maziar's survival and central to his memoir. I wanted to make sure we got humour in there, but in a way that we didn't impose it on it — not in any kind of contrivance but in a way that allowed it to grow organically from those situations. If we had heightened it and created farcical elements around it, it would have diminished just how the reality of the absurdity was so stark.

Bringing 'were'-withal to Wolves. And howl!

Movies. Werewolf film director David Hayter on making the monsters that make the movie

scene@metronews.ca

It's taken filmmaker David Hayter seven long years to bring his werewolf thriller to the big screen, and in that time he's learned one important lesson.

'Vampires have it easy. You just put some pale makeup on a good-looking actor and a cool pair of teeth and you got yourself a vampire," laughed the 45-year-old writer-turneddirector. "Werewolves are an entirely different thing. You can't scrimp on the creature because that's part of the joy of seeing a movie like this seeing how the filmmakers execute the creature."

In the case of his forthcoming feature Wolves, that meant forsaking the budget normally reserved for an

A-list cast to pour those dollars into effects and monster design. For Hayter's lupine lead characters, that meant no canine snouts ("they read like a big nose") and a focus on realism.

"We all think werewolves are cool but in their exe-

"It's such an incredible film, werewolf or no," said Hayter of the 1981 John Landis hit. "Obviously the prosthetic effects in it weren't only groundbreaking, but they continue to be incredible pieces of art today."

The Most Underrated Werewolf Film: Ginger Snaps

Hayter didn't just want to explore the world of costume design. The screenwriter of such hits as Watchmen and X-Men aimed to spin a fresh angle on the werewolf mythology through a tale of a young violent teen who must come to terms with his wolfen bloodlines in a small town carrying dark secrets. It may have been a challenge, but having studied under acclaimed X-Men director Bryan Singer several times, Hayter borrowed from the best. "Pretty much everything I do in filmmaking I do with Bryan's voice in my head screaming at me not to turn out crap," said Hayter. Every element from creature design to screenplay execution to dealing with actors all that stuff comes from what I learned from Bryan.'

Music. Neil Young bares his soul, tackles big issues in his second album this year

"Who's gonna stand up and save the Earth," Neil Young sings twice on his new album — once to the songwriter's familiar guitar and also with a chorus and orchestra.

One answer, of course, is that Young himself will stand up. But the veteran protest singer also has plenty more on his mind on Storytone, not the least of which are his romantic travails.

Storytone is the second album by the prolific Canadian singer this year and sprawls in diverse directions, with Young performing with a choir, two large orchestras and a jazzdriven big band.

A deluxe version of his 35th album features solo versions of songs that fall more into his classic repertoire of guitar-driven folk-rock.

Young turns to the orchestra as his thoughts shift to matters of the heart, with the singer — who turns 69 next week — excited to have found love again and, at times, bristling at judgment from outsiders.

"So many people don't understand what it's like to be

me," he sings to a solo piano, with orchestral arrangements filling the gaps between verses. "But I'm not different from anyone else / I'm glad I found you."

The singer filed for divorce this year from Pegi Young, his wife of 36 years. Pegi was presumed to be the subject of some of his most memorable love songs in the past, including 1992's Such a Woman, in which he sang, "Our love will live until the end of all time."

Since the divorce, gossip media have linked Young to actress and fellow activist Daryl Hannah. The relationship has played out increasingly in the public eye, with Young's former bandmate David Crosby chastising him over the divorce.

Young explains his sentiments on Glimmer, singing to almost operatic strings, "Tough love can leave you almost alone / But new love brings back everything to you."

But he also retains his political edge, with strident calls to fight the "big machine" to reduce reliance on fossil fuels and end fracking, the deep drilling for shale gas. "Take down the dams, stand up to oil / Protect the plants, and renew the soil," Young sings.

Young has no plans for retirement. Along with his environmental activism, he is soon releasing a second book and is developing Pono, which aims to bring high-quality audio to downloading.

"I'm just doing the things that I think I should do. A lot of what I do now is based on trying to get some lasting value out of the rest of my life and the notoriety that I've managed to get," he has said. AFP

Lorde is the bestie for her Swifty retort to Diplo gag

Oh, Diplo. You should have known not to go after Taylor Swift. When the DJ/producer started a Kickstarter campaign to Get Taylor Swift a Booty, Swift's BFF Lorde came to her rescue in full force. "Taylor Swift Still Needs Your Help," the campaign page reads. "Any true supporter of TSWIFT would definitely not pass up this opportunity to improve her posterior! THIS is not a joke!" (Obviously it's a joke.)

The fact that Diplo happens to be dating Swift enemy Katy Perry takes this from a prank to some song-writing-worthy drama. While Swift may not have fired back, that didn't stop Lorde, who tweeted at Diplo, "Should we do something about your tiny penis while we're at it?"

Fraida not, Dumb and Dumber To: JLaw nixes flashback cameo

This was probably for the best, really. Despite being a professed fan of the first film, Jennifer Lawrence reportedly had second thoughts about her planned cameo appearance in Dumb and Dumber To—playing a younger version of Kathleen Turner's character, Fraida Felcher, in a flashback.

According to the Hollywood Reporter, Lawrence happily filmed the cameo last fall but retained the right to nix it from the film's final cut if she didn't like it, and she apparently exercised that right. Sound judgment.

Achtung baby, there's U2 debris in those German trees

NED EHRBAR

Somewhere in a forest in Germany, a couple of suitcases from U2's private jet are just waiting for you to find them.

Bono and four friends were flying the band's Learjet 60 from Dublin to Berlin earlier this week when the rear door of the luggage compartment fell off and dropped 15,000 feet to the ground, along with two pieces of luggage.

While the pilots told investigators they felt a turbulence-like rumble, the crew and passengers didn't realize what had happened until they landed. "The aircraft and its rear door are painted black, so the search in the wooded area will be difficult," a spokesman for the German Federal Bureau of Aircraft Accident Investigation says.

All I'm saying is that somewhere in Germany, there's a hiker suddenly looking to shift 150 pairs of sunglasses on eBay.

Robin Wright has Ben there, done that, breaks off engagement

There's been plenty of reporting about Sean Penn's love life since divorcing Robin Wright, from his brief fling with Scarlett Johansson to his ongoing relationship with Charlize Theron.

But what about Wright? What's she been up to? Well, maybe you shouldn't have asked. The House of Cards star has reportedly broken off her 10-month engagement to Ben Foster, according to Us Weekly. "She got swept up in the engagement last Christmas, but then their schedules got crazy and she realized it wasn't the right decision," a source says.

But another source thinks it's all down to the age difference between the two. "The gap just ended up being too much," the second source insists. "Ben was kind of immature. She couldn't deal with him anymore." Ouch.

Pappardelle with Braised Rabbit. This pasta dish is off the beaten culinary path in more ways than one

RICARDO COOKS Chef Ricardo Ricardo Magazine

If braising isn't in your cooking repertoire, it's time to add it—stat! This technique, which involves searing a piece of meat and letting it cook slowly in some stock and aromatics, delivers big flavour for a minimum amount of effort.

You will fall in love with this creamy pasta recipe. The rich sauce with braised rabbit is off the beaten path, since it doesn't include tomatoes.

skillet over medium high heat, brown the rabbit in the butter. Season with salt and pepper. Set aside on a plate.

2. In the same saucepan, soften the carrots, onion and garlic. Sprinkle with the flour and cook while stirring for about 1 minute. Add the wine and bring to a boil, stirring constantly.

3. Add the broth, bay leaf and rabbit pieces. Bring to a boil, cover, and simmer over medium-low heat, for about 1 hour and 30 minutes. Remove the rabbit and bay leaf. Debone the meat and return it to the sauce. Adjust the seasoning.

Pasta

1. Meanwhile, in large pot of salted boiling water, cook the pasta al dente. Drain and oil lightly if they have to rest aside.

2. Add the pasta and herbs to the pan with the rabbit sauce. Stir to combine and warm through. Stir in the cheese and adjust the seasoning.

Growing up in Nova Scotia, I saw my fair share of rabbits in the wild, and sometimes even in my own backyard.

I was more into feeding them than eating them; though my grandfather was prone to springing one on me as an entrée during fishing trips we'd take together when I was a kid.

I've had rabbit since, but never featured on a bed of pappardelle à la Ricardo this week.

On its own, rabbit prefers a red. Its light, gamey flavour works well with wines made from Malbec, Shiraz and Pinot Noir.

In Ricardo's recipe the creamy sauce calls for a white liquid partner. A subtly oaked Chardonnay is a good choice, as is an Italian from Soave or a Pinot Grigio.

A white from France's Rhône region is an inspired alternative. M. Chapoutier's 2012 Belleruche Côtes-du-Rhône Blanc ($16.61 to $19.99) has a base of Grenache blanc that gives it bright aromatics and a full, round flavour that will appease both the protein and pasta dressing.

Thank your muscles for the good mood

Wellness. Study shows well-trained muscles produce enzyme that quards against the blues

Besides the short-term feelgood endorphins released during exercise, scientists have known that physically fit people are also better protected from stress-induced depression.

But the reason for this benefit wasn't clear until a new study by researchers at Sweden's Karlinska Institutet unlocked how the brain is protected by exercise.

Research has shown that workout out raises the level of a protein called PGC-1a1 in skeletal muscle.

The Swedish team honed in on this protein, genetically modifying mice to produce more of the protein, which led to their skeletal muscles showing characteristics of training even without exercise, they report in the journal

These mice, as well as a group of non-modified control mice, were kept under stressful conditions that included loud noises, flashing lights and disruption of their natural circadian rhythms. After five weeks, the normal mice had become depressed, but the genetically modified mice showed no symptoms or behaviours of depression.

The puzzle of depression

Depression is estimated to affect 350 million people worldwide, and scientists are still unsure of its cause and chemistry.

"In neurobiological terms, we actually still don't know what depression is," said Mia Lindskog, a researcher at the Department of Neuroscience at Karolinska Institutet. "Our study represents another piece in the puzzle, since we provide an explanation for the protective biochemical changes induced by physical exercise that prevent the brain from being damaged

The researchers' initial hypothesis was that the PGC-1a1 enhanced muscles would produce a brain-boosting substance, but that's not what happened.
"We actually found the opposite: Well-trained muscle produces an enzyme that purges the body of harmful substances," Jorge Ruas, principal investigator at the Department of Physiology and Pharmacology, Karolinska Institutet said in a statement. "So in this context, the muscle's function is reminiscent of that of the kidney or the liver."

The enhanced mice also showed higher levels of an enzyme called KAT, which converts a metabolism byproduct, kynurenine, that forms during stress into kynurenic acid, which cannot pass the bloodbrain barrier. Though the exact function of kynurenine isn't known, it's present in high levels in mentally ill pa-

In fact, mice in the PGC-1a1 were not only unaffected by their stressful environment, their kynurenine levels never rose since it was so rapidly converted by their muscles.

When it comes to working out, your snacks should work as hard as you do. We got registered dietitian Molly Morgan to share some of her favourite products from Nuts.com to help your body build muscle, fight fat and recover the best it can after a workout.

Cacao Goji Energy Squares:

When a dietitian recommends chocolate, who are we to argue? These densely packed bites are made with organic, raw ingredients: dried fruit such as dates, raisins and apricots, as well as sunflower and sesame seeds. Besides being a great source of vitamins, minerals and fibre, the cacao and goji berry add antioxidants, plus the boost of energy needed to get you pumped for your workout.

Power Mix:

This grown-up version of trail mix is pure energy (with zero added salt). Roasted peanuts and soybeans provide ample amounts of protein and dietary fibre, while raisins, dried strawberries, cherries and cranberries pack in vitamins and antioxidants. Just toss this snack into your gym bag, or bring some along on hikes and bike rides for a steady source of body fuel.

Sacha Inchi:

Also known as Inca peanuts, these make Morgan's list because they provide a complete source of protein with all the essential amino acids. Just a handful (1 ounce) has about 8 grams of protein and 6 grams of fibre. Their mild, nutty taste makes them a great addition to a smoothie; toss a few in for texture.

These little squares contain all nine essential amino acids, the proteins that build muscle. Quinoa puffs are an easy way to get the benefit from the nutrients in regular quinoa, an excellent source of iron and fibre. Morgan likes them as part of breakfast, perfect with a drizzle of honey, fresh fruit (go for blueberries, an antioxidant powerhouse) and milk.

It's supplemental when it comes to vitamins

Nutrition tips. Looking for a little extra oomph in your diet? Experts weigh in on which add-ons actually provide a benefit

EMIL KRISTIANSEN

With aisles full of endless vitamins and supplements, which are the ones you really need to take? We asked experts for their best advice on what supplements to take — and more importantly, how to remember to take them!

Nutritionist Brooke Alpert, a registered dietician and author of The Sugar Detox, recommends all her clients take vitamin D, omega-3 and a probiotic. Those three are what most people are lacking, she says, and they are vitamins that can be taken every day.

"The goal is to get these from your diet, but there's no way to get enough vitamin D from your diet," she says. "And there's no way of being sure that we get enough omega and fatty acids from the quality of fish we're eating."

The nutritionist recommends that fat-soluble vitamins like A, D, E and K should be taken with food. Fat helps you absorb those vitamins, she ex-

"But what's most important is taking them at a time you will remember. I would rather have the vitamins be a little less effective, but taking them regularly instead of sporadically," Alpert says.

And she has some good advice for how to remember it:

"Put the vitamins next to your toothbrush, so you remember to take them before you go to bed. You brush your teeth, you floss, you take your vitamins and you go to sleep."

Another important thing is to get into a vitamin routine as early as possible.

"In their 20s, a lot of people aren't thinking long term," she says.

"'I'm 25, I'm invincible. I feel great, I don't need sleep.' But get into that routine of taking vitamins, and trust me when you're in your 30s you'll appreciate what you did in your 20s," the nutritionist says.

Dermatologist Dr. Mitchell Kline also highly recommends that people take a vitamin D supplement.

You can't get enough vitamin D by going in the sun for 15 minutes. That's made up!" Kline says.

He also wants everyone to remember to get their anti-oxidants — especially men, who seem to forget it.

"It's also important to get these vitamins topically," the dermatologist adds. "Use cream for your face. Again, that's something men forget about. Cream is necessary."

Lastly, the doctor adds that vitamins can be taken when it suits you.

"If it doesn't upset the stomach, you can take it whenever. If the vitamins upset your stomach, you should take (them) after a meal," he says.

Trendy toys to light up little faces

There's not much parents wouldn't do to see little faces light up with delight and make Christmas magical.

most of your online shopping.

"If you hate trying to keep track of coupons, just Google 'promo code ____' before tak-'promo code ____ ing your online cart through the checkout and you can often save a huge amount off of the original price or at the very least snag free shipping," suggested Prevost. In addition, check other alternative retailers than the primary one you're shopping with for deals such as eBay, Kijiji, and Craigslist.

Team up on gifts That way you could collectively spring for larger items that normally wouldn't fit in your budget.

"This year, my spouse and I are teaming up with my parents to get my brother and his spouse camping Therm-asays Anne Keery, who runs the blog uniquegifter. "Having only one just isn't that useful, but two is well beyond my budget.'

Think hard about the gifts you choose "Do not get caught up in the latest hype,' warns Keery. "If your gift recipient still wants the craze item in six months, chances are very good it will be more readily available and be sporting a lower price tag."

In fact Keery notes that there are two different ways to shop for holiday gifts that can keep your budget in

"One is to keep a very open mind about what you want to purchase, so you can take advantage of great prices as you come across them," she suggests. "And the second approach is to have a concrete list and comparison shop for those specific items.'

And for next year... Be that annoying friend and shop all year long for Christmas.

"Plan ahead and pounce on seasonal deals that occur throughout the year. It might require almost superhuman organization and shopping skills to anticipate winter coat needs in April or May, but if you don't mind sitting on that perfect gift for a few months you can save yourself a wad of cash," says Prevost.

In addition to grabbing good sales, this also spaces out the financial hit of the holiday season over more of the year so you don't get hit

Lemon cranberry biscotti

This year, spread some holiday cheer to a friend, neighbour, or colleague with a freshly baked batch of crisp and flavourful biscotti.

Makes 24 servings Ingredients: 2-1/4 cups (550 mL) all-purpose flour 1 cup (250 mL) sugar 1 cup (250 ml) dried cranberries 2 tbsp (30 ml) grated lemon peel 2 tsp (10 ml) baking powder 3 large eggs 3 tbsp (45 ml) butter, 2 tbsp (30 ml) fresh lemon 2 tsp (10 ml) vanilla Preparation: 1. Preheat oven to 350°F

2. Combine flour, sugar, cranberries, lemon zest and baking powder. In a separate bowl, whisk eggs, butter, lemon juice and vanilla until well blended. 3. Pour liquid ingredients over dry ingredients.

Stir until a stiff dough is formed. Turn out onto a lightly floured surface and gently knead in any remaining bits of dough. Divide dough in half. Gently form each half into a log 12 x 1 1/2 inches. Place on a parchmentlined baking sheet, leaving at least 3 inches between the logs. Flatten the top of each with the palm of your hand until the log is 2-inches wide. Bake 23 to 25 minutes or until the top of the log is firm to the touch. 4. Cool the logs completely. 5. Reduce oven temperature to 300° F (150° Č). Remove the cooled logs to a cutting board. Cut each diagonally into ½-inch wide slices. Place on the same baking sheet. Bake 15 to 18 minutes or until slices are dry and light golden in colour. Cool biscotti on baking sheet on a wire rack. NEWS CANADA

Give the gift of clean, safe water

Living in Canada, it's easy to take for granted our readily available access to clean, safe drinking water at the turn of a tap. Not all people are as fortunate as we are — in fact, one child under the age of five dies every minute due to a lack of safe water and sanitation

This holiday season, WaterAid Canada can help you make the gift of clean water a reality for children, women and men who desperately need it.

This year's Gifts of Water holiday campaign will help to change the lives of over 40,000 people living in the impoverished Monze District of Zambia. Their community-driven projects assist local people to gain access to safe water, hygiene education, and sanitation facilities — thereby opening the door to better health and livelihoods.

"It's not about a quick-fix; it's about providing long-term, sustainable solutions that are locally appropriate and owned by the communities we partner with. It's about giving a hand-up, not a hand out," explained Allison Stark, a representative of WaterAid Canada.

As little as $100, which we easily spend on a night out at the movies with our kids, can provide a lasting and life-giving source of clean, safe drinking water for a family of four."

Last year, WaterAid Canada raised $109,000 during their Gifts of Water campaign and with the community's support they hope to do even better this year. Gifts of Water start at only $25. You can make donations until the end of December by visiting giftofwater.ca.

A GIFT FOR BOTH SENIORS AND CAREGIVERS ALIKE

The greatest gift of all? The gift of independence. And through donations to Carefor Health & Community Services, seniors throughout Eastern Ontario can enjoy more time — and safer conditions — at home.

It can also give those unheralded heroes, the caregivers, the gift of time and respite.

"We can help families who need respite — who need a break," explained Beth Monaco, a fundraising specialist for Carefor, adding that donations go to fund a number of programs, including helping subsidize adult day programs for people with dementia.

"We subsidize entry into the program for those who need it," she said. "Though it's not a lot of money, even $20 can be a burden for caregivers and families. This subsidy is not funded and is only possible through the generosity of our donors."

In addition to the adult day program, which provides social and physical interaction for patients, Carefor provides a number of services, including visiting nurses, in-house nursing, and respite care. This includes a 12-bed facility that supports seniors when their caregivers need a short-term respite for things such as personal surgery.

"Participation in some of our programs has doubled," she said. "It's a benefit for all because not only do people stay in their homes longer, but they can avoid hospital stays and injuries."

Sucker for puppy-dog eyes? Support the OHS

Planning to add a pet your family this holiday season? From purebred puppies and kittens to goofy mutts and lap cats, there are thousands of animals available for adoption every year at the Ottawa Humane Society and they're missing just one thing — you.

"We're a one-stop shop for value, convenience and selection," said Natalie Pona, OHS spokeswoman. "When you go to a breeder, you see a couple animals but when you come to the OHS, you meet almost a hundred different pets in one place."

Adopting from the OHS means you're doing some good this holiday season, as 100 per cent of every adoption fee goes to helping the more than 10,000 animals that come to the OHS annually.

"You're helping us change the lives of thousands of animals," Pona said.

Unlike most animals purchased from a breeder or Kijiji, OHS pets come "fullyloaded," Pona said.

"Our dogs and cats have been spayed or neutered, vaccinated, temperament tested, and microchipped. They come with six weeks of free pet insurance and a health guarantee. There's a lot of care that goes into every animal."

Not only will pets from Kijiji often need expensive routine medical treatments — care included in every OHS adoption — but online sellers aren't always upfront.

"You don't know whether that free puppy is on his third home because he's unpredictable with kids," Pona said. "When you adopt from us, you have the peace of mind knowing your pet has been behaviour tested. We have experts who'll find you the right pet."

If you haven't visited the OHS lately, it's time to go back.

5 WAYS TO HELP

Become a PAW hero and help the animals with a monthly donation.

Kershaw completes awards double-play

MLB. Dodgers lefty named NL MVP one day after winning Cy Young; Angels' Trout named top player in AL

Clayton Kershaw became the first pitcher to win the National League MVP award in nearly a half-century, coasting to an easy victory Thursday.

Mike Trout was a unanimous pick for the AL honour after finishing second the previous two years. The 23-year-old became the fifth-youngest MVP in major-league history and the youngest unanimous selection.

Kershaw, the Los Angeles Dodgers ace, breezed past Miami slugger Giancarlo Stanton and Pittsburgh outfielder Andrew McCutchen for the NL award.

Bob Gibson in 1968 was the previous pitcher to be the NL MVP. Detroit pitcher Justin Verlander won the AL MVP in 2011.

Impressive stats

In his third full season, Trout hit .287 and set career highs in home runs (36) and RBIs (111) while leading the major league in runs with 115 and extra-base hits with 84.

"To have people think you mean that much to your team, it really is a huge honour," Kershaw said on the MLB Network telecast.

The 26-year-old lefty's numbers dominated hitters. Kershaw led the majors in wins and ERA while going 21-3 with a 1.77 ERA and throwing a no-hitter for the NL West champions. Kershaw got 18 of 30 firstplace votes and 355 points in balloting.

Meanwhile, Trout received all 30 first-place votes and 420 points. Detroit designated hitter Victor Martinez was second with 229 points and Cleveland outfielder Michael Brantley third with 185.

V-Mart, Tigers agree on 4-year deal: Report

Victor Martinez has agreed to a $68-million, four-year contract to stay with the Detroit Tigers, according to a person with knowledge of the deal.

The person spoke on condition of anonymity to The Associated Press on Thursday because the agreement has not been announced.

The 35-year-old Martinez had perhaps his best season in 2014, hitting .335 with 32 home runs and 103 RBIs and helping Detroit to its fourth straight AL Central title — a streak that began after the Tigers signed him as a free agent before the 2011 season. That four-year deal was worth $50 million, and Detroit got plenty of value out of Martinez even though he missed the whole 2012 season with a knee injury. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Crosby empathizes with injured OHL phenom

Sidney Crosby didn't see the fight that caused Connor Mc-David to break a bone in his hand. Still, the NHL superstar understands what it's like to get picked on as a junior-hockey prospect.

"I'm sure he's got a target on his back," Crosby said Thursday. "It's not easy sometimes. It's one of those flukey things. But no matter how many times you've done it, even if you talk to guys who have fought for years, anything can happen in a fight and you really do have to be careful."

McDavid is out five to six weeks with a fracture of the fifth metacarpal bone in his right hand as a result of hitting the top of the boards during a fight Tuesday night with Mississauga's Bryson Cianfrone.

Though Érie Otters owner and general manager Sherry Bassin said he's "confident" his captain will be able to play for Canada at the world junior championship, the six-week time frame makes that a question mark.

Leg injury means ATP heartache for Raonic

Forced to withdraw.

Canadian ace tears muscle in loss to Murray, pulls out of last Finals group match

Canadian Milos Raonic withdrew from his final group match at the ATP Finals in London on Thursday after suffering a leg muscle tear in a loss earlier this week to Andy Murray

The seventh-seeded Raonic was scheduled to play U.S. Open finalist Kei Nishikori of Japan, but was replaced in the Group B pool by Spanish substitute David Ferrer.

Raonic, who was 0-2 at the year-end event, said he suffered the injury late in the first set of Tuesday's 6-3, 7-6 loss to Murray. "At first it felt like cramping, but when I got up from a changeover and had to stand, I knew it was something else," he said. The 23-year-old Canadian said the low-grade tear in his quadriceps muscle measures three by five centimetres and is about a centimetre deep.

"Obviously I feel pessimistic right now," Raonic said, adding doctors told him play-have competed, but it is what it is."

Raonic, from Thornhill, Ont., said he was looking forward to facing Nishikori, who had won four of their five meetings.

"This experience this week motivates me a lot," he said. "I felt I did pretty well, but know I can do a lot better. My season has been consistent, but I would have liked to have had a few more chances to win big matches.

"I really badly wanted to play; the competition here is about facing the best and being on top of your game."

Tennis. Federer serves up a thrashing to Murray

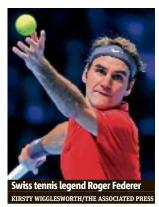

Roger Federer blew away Andy Murray 6-0, 6-1 to finish the ATP Finals round-robin unbeaten, and hand Murray his worst defeat in seven years in front of his home crowd on Thursday.

Federer, the most successful player at the year-end championship with six titles, equaled Ivan Lendl's record of 12 semifinal appearances in winning his group ahead of Japanese debutant Kei Nishikori.

It was a ruthless win for Federer, and humiliation for Murray, who last won only one game in 2007 at Miami, against Novak Djokovic.

Before playing Murray, Federer had already secured a semis berth after Nishikori defeated David Ferrer 4-6, 6-4, 6-1 in the afternoon.

That left Murray needing to defeat the 17-Grand Slam champion in straight sets to make it to the last four at the O2 Arena and thwart the Japanese newcomer.

But Federer, yet to drop a set, made a perfect start, losing only eight points in a 23-minute first set.

Soccer

World Cup bidding scandal just won't go away for FIFA

Just when you thought the turmoil surrounding FIFA couldn't get any more tangled, a new twist is here to stir things up even more.

If the leaders of soccer's scandal-scarred world governing body thought Thursday's report into the 2018 and 2022 World Cup bidding process would put to rest any suspicions of corruption, they should think again. Winning host nations Russia and Qatar got what they hoped for when the report from FIFA's ethics judge Joachim Eckert largely cleared their bids, but the saga is far from over.

That's because the American lawyer who led the investigation disputed Eckert's findings. Eckert declared the case closed, ruling that there was no evidence to support reopening the votes that awarded the 2018 World Cup to Russia and the 2022 tournament to Qatar. Yes, the German judge said, some wrongdoing was committed by eight of the nine candidates. But no, the integrity of the December 2010 votes was not affected.

FIFA, which released Eckert's report, said "a degree of closure has been reached." Not so fast. Michael Garcia, the former American prosecutor who carried out the investigation acted on by Eckert, struck back against "numerous materially incomplete and erroneous representations of the facts and conclusions" in his work. Garcia intends to appeal.

↑ Aries

March 21 - April 20

Don't let self-doubt creep into your mind. If a certain course of action was right before, it is still right. There is nothing wrong with what you are doing but your attitude could be better.

Taurus April 21 - May 21

You need something to take your mind off your problems. Better still, you need to reorder your mind so you can see they are not really problems at all.

∐ Gemini

May 22 - June 21

Try not to exaggerate your troubles today, because with the Sun at odds with Jupiter, planet of expansion, things could easily get out of control.

9 Cancer

June 22 - July 23

If you approach a work or relationship problem from a predictable angle then you will get a predictable answer. But if you creep up on it you may discover something you had not noticed before — that it's not really a problem at all.

Ω Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23

A financial matter must be left to run its course. You could've done more to influence the outcome but it's too late now.

M Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23

You may be able to see where loved ones are going wrong but unless they specifically ask for your assistance you are advised to keep your distance.

📤 Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23

What you are given today may not be what you wanted but if you accept it in the right spirit it will lead to something better.

M Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22

Every turn you take seems to lead further away from what you are aiming for. Could it be that your subconscious mind is trying to warn you that what you're aiming for isn't desirable?

7¹ Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21 Something will challenge your established opinions today and you could even find yourself agreeing with ideas and theories you once dismissed.

O Capricorn

Dec. 22 - Jan. 20 You have a tendency to work harder than most people but with the Sun at odds with Jupiter today you could go too far and exhaust yourself.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19

You may be inclined to throw caution to the wind and take a gamble but the planets indicate it could go wrong. You don't have to take risks to get what you need — just stick to your
